Many California residents have lost work or experienced a reduction in hours because of coronavirus (COVID-19). Other Californians whose workplace is still open might need time off to care for themselves or a loved one. Many of these workers may be entitled to some time off for coronavirus-related absences, and/or eligible for some form of wage replacement while they are not working.

This guide provides an overview of the replacement income and job-protected leave programs available to California’s workers, and can help orient workers to the programs that may be right for them.

* Generally, if someone qualifies for two or more of these starred leave programs for the same underlying reason, they will run concurrently. However, some programs may be used consecutively for different underlying reasons:

  Where an employee qualifies for FFCRA Expanded Family Medical Leave based on the need to care for a child at home due to school closure, FFCRA Emergency Paid Sick Leave, FFCRA Expanded Family Medical Leave, and FMLA leave run concurrently. This means that Emergency Paid Sick Leave can be used to replace income during the first two unpaid weeks of FFCRA Expanded Family Medical Leave. It also means that if the employee has already used some of their FMLA leave during the previous 12-month period, the timeframe of leave available will be reduced by that amount.

  Where an employee qualifies for FMLA or CFRA leave based on their own or a family member’s serious health condition, and the same condition also qualifies them for FFCRA Emergency Paid Sick Leave, Emergency Paid Sick Leave and FMLA/CFRA leave run concurrently. This means that FFCRA Emergency Paid Sick Leave can be used to replace income during the first two weeks of leave, and employees can evaluate whether they qualify for SDI or PFL to replace income during the remainder of leave.

Workers can generally only use one paid leave program at a time.
