RE: Language Access in California Courts

Dear Hon. Kevin C. Brazile (Co-chair), Hon. Victor A. Rodriguez (Co-chair), Members, and Staff of the Judicial Council Advisory Committee on Providing Access and Fairness:

We submit these comments to the Judicial Council Advisory Committee on Providing Access and Fairness (PAF) to highlight the critical need for a comprehensive evaluation of the current state of language access in the California courts. Language barriers deepen longstanding inequities based on race, language, and disability that must be addressed in order to realize a comprehensive vision of access to justice. Across the state, we continue to see incidents of inadequate access to services for court users with limited English proficiency (LEP)¹:

- In a recent unlawful detainer case in Los Angeles, a Cantonese-speaking tenant with LEP was pressured by two different judicial officers to proceed without an interpreter; in one instance, the tenant's own attorney, despite not speaking the same language as the tenant, was asked to interpret for her client. In another unlawful detainer case in Los Angeles, a judicial officer refused to wait for a Spanish language interpreter for a routine matter, deeming it an inefficient use of resources. The hearing proceeded, leaving the litigant completely in the dark about what had occurred until after it had concluded.

- In San Luis Obispo County, a Spanish-speaking client was unable to obtain information about her Unlawful Detainer case because she could not access court services by phone or in-person due to the lack of Spanish-speaking staff and interpreters as well as phone recordings and signage provided only in English.
- At least 32 county courts at various points from approximately 2020 to 2026 relied on machine translation for services outside the courtroom at counters, clerk's windows, and self-help centers. The machine-based translation program consistently rendered nonsensical messages such as "Sting the judge to reduce a fever," and translated DUI as IUD. In many instances, these errors led public users to walk away with incorrect or incomplete information from the court regarding their legal cases.
- Language access services remain absent or inadequate in many court programs, services, and points of public interaction, including the following:
 - In Yuba County, a self-help and family law facilitator office that routinely assists court users in completing Domestic Violence Restraining Order (DVRO) filings handed a Dari-speaking domestic violence survivor the DVRO packet in English and directed her to use Google Translate to complete it.
 - In Santa Barbara County, court staff at the self-help center inform Mixteco-speaking individuals that they should bring their own interpreters when seeking assistance at the self-help center.
 - The Los Angeles Superior Court's Family Law Facilitator page advises "non-English speakers" to "bring someone who can assist with interpreting."²
 - The Merced County self-help services staff say they cannot guarantee the availability of Spanish-speaking staff for appointments and ask individuals to make their own arrangements to have a friend or relative to assist with the appointment.
 - In Ventura County, court staff claim they are not required to provide interpreters for self-help services.
 - The San Benito County website states, "Interpreter services are not available at the Self-Help Center, if needed, please bring your own interpreter to help you."³
 - In Napa County, even if an interpreter is requested in advance, court staff say that an interpreter is not guaranteed in civil matters and will only be provided if available. Court staff at times advise individuals to bring a family member or friend to interpret, and recently a pro tem judge suggested that an attorney should be able to interpret for their own client.
- Court users regularly face language barriers in small claims court. For example, the Orange County Superior Court's small claims preparation page states it is the individual's responsibility to get their own interpreter and that they can ask a friend, relative, or someone else to interpret for them.⁴

- With respect to remote court hearings, court users and interpreters consistently report missed information, confusion, and delays due to poor audio quality, cumbersome dual-device requirements, and inadequate tech support.

Given these continued experiences and numerous similar incidents, we specifically request a thorough review on the efficacy and impact of the Strategic Plan for Language Access in the California Courts (LAP) along with the accompanying and subsequent legislation, policies, rules, and funding allocations. This assessment should evaluate access for court users who use non-English spoken languages and for those who are Deaf or Hard of Hearing. In light of PAF's dedication to improving access to the judicial system, fairness in the state courts, diversity in the judicial branch, and court services for self-represented parties, the committee should conduct a rigorous assessment to bridge the gap between the efforts and promises made in 2015 and the daily realities of court users today. We provide these comments within the context of our experiences serving court users with LEP in family, probate, unlawful detainer, small claims, and other civil matters. Many of the clients we serve are low-income individuals of color from linguistically marginalized communities for whom language access is inseparable from access to justice.

I. Federal & State Legal Obligations Require Comprehensive & Meaningful Language Access

California courts, as recipients of federal and state funding, are bound by an extensive framework of federal and state laws, regulations, policies, and guidance requiring meaningful language access for court users with LEP. Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 requires federally funded programs to provide equal access to individuals with LEP.⁵ Under Title VI and its implementing regulations, recipients of federal funds must provide meaningful access to their services for individuals with LEP.⁶

As federal funding recipients through the Department of Justice (DOJ), the California courts are also subject to the DOJ guidance on enforcement of Title VI, which instructs recipients of federal funding to “take reasonable steps to ensure ‘meaningful’ access to the information and services they provide.”⁷ Reasonable steps recommended under Title VI guidance and enforcement agreements include, but are not limited to, the following examples:

Ohio 2003) (holding that a food stamp program's failure to provide bilingual translation of materials could constitute intentional discrimination on the basis of national origin under Title VI); Lau v. Nichols, 414 U.S. 563, 568 (1974) (establishing the denial of services to non-English speaking groups as national origin discrimination under Title VI).

⁷ Enforcement of Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964-National Origin Discrimination Against Persons with Limited English Proficiency, 65 Fed. Reg. 50123, 50124 (Aug. 16, 2000).

- Create a formal plan for providing language services;
- Implement a system for early and accurate identification of language needs;
- Provide free interpreting services in proceedings and during any interaction where court staff provide important information;
- Provide language services at counters and other public areas;
- Provide written translation of vital documents and other materials using qualified human translators;
- Post signs notifying users of the availability of language services;
- Translate key content on court websites;
- Provide language access training to staff;
- Engage in oversight and monitor complaints.

Notably, these steps extend beyond judicial proceedings and include all court programs, activities, services, and benefits. The DOJ has defined “meaningful access” as: “Language assistance that results in accurate, timely, and effective communication at no cost to the individual with LEP needing assistance. Meaningful access denotes access that is not significantly restricted, delayed, or inferior as compared to programs or activities provided to English-proficient individuals.”⁸ The guidance makes clear that meaningful access requires courts to provide language services at all points of contact between court users and the court, not solely during formal legal proceedings.

Federal Title VI regulations and guidance state that vital written materials must be translated for frequently-encountered language groups likely to be affected by a recipient’s program or in the eligible service population.⁹ Whether a document is “vital” depends on the importance of the program, information or service involved, and the consequence to the non-dominant language user if the information in question is not provided accurately or in a timely manner.¹⁰ Examples include but are not limited to written notices of rights, benefits, services, and proceedings, and written notices advising persons with LEP of free language assistance. The lack of translated documents remained an issue of concern at the closure of the Department of Justice’s language access investigation into the Superior Court of California, Los Angeles County in 2020, specifically mentioning the need for accurate forms and documents.¹¹ The DOJ recommended that the courts continue their ongoing process of “determining what materials will be translated by qualified linguists and to continue to conduct outreach to local organizations and legal aid offices to help identify vital information in need of translation.” These recommendations underscore the principle that translations of vital documents completed by qualified human translators are a key component of meaningful access.

Designed to be even more expansive than its Title VI federal counterpart, California Government Code § 11135 also requires state courts to provide meaningful access to court users with LEP. CA Government Code § 11135 provides in pertinent part that “[n]o person in the State of California shall, on the basis of . . . national origin [or] ethnic group identification . . . be unlawfully denied full and equal access to the benefits of, or be unlawfully subjected to discrimination under, any program or activity that is conducted, operated, or administered by the state or by any state agency, is funded directly by the state, or receives any financial assistance from the state.” Accompanying regulations at Title 2, Sections 14100 and 14101 of the California Code of Regulations state that it is discriminatory not to take appropriate steps to provide “alternative communication services” for individuals based on their national origin or ethnic group identification, which includes linguistic characteristics. These alternative communication services can include “the provision of the services of a multilingual employee or an interpreter for the benefit of an ultimate beneficiary” and “the provision of written materials in a language other than English.”¹² Thus, under CA Government Code § 11135, state courts must provide interpreting and translation services necessary to ensure meaningful access for Californians with LEP. Nothing in the statute limits these obligations to formal legal proceedings.

II. The Promises of the 2015 Strategic Plan for Language Access in the California Courts Remain Unrealized

The Judicial Council’s adoption of the Strategic Plan for Language Access in the California Courts (Language Access Plan or LAP) in 2015 marked a significant milestone in advancing language access, but its full promise has yet to be realized. The LAP sought to ensure meaningful and comprehensive language access for all court users, not only to court proceedings themselves, but all points of contact, programs, and activities outside the courtroom. Statutory enhancements accompanied these changes, such as California Government Code 68092.1 “declar[ing] that it is imperative that courts provide interpreters to all parties who require one, and that both the legislative and judicial branches of government continue in their joint commitment to carry out this shared goal,” and California Evidence Code § 756, stating that as “required by other state or federal laws, the Judicial Council shall reimburse courts for court interpreter services provided in civil actions and proceedings to any party who is present in court and who does not proficiently speak or understand the English language for the purpose of interpreting the proceedings in a language the party understands, and assisting communications between the party, the party’s attorney, and the court.” Codified in 2015, Evidence Code § 756 recognized that language access expansion to all proceedings would take time and therefore put a priority system in place as resources and funding could be secured for full implementation.¹³

While the LAP and Evidence Code § 756 established a roadmap for expanding language access, inconsistent implementation and varying interpretations of the requirements have limited their effectiveness. The LAP called for a three phase implementation, which included creating efficiencies in existing court operations, improved deployment of current resources, promulgation of court rules, legislation, new funding allocations, and a set of 75 comprehensive recommendations, to be completed in 2020. The Judicial Council Language Access Plan

¹³ Strategic Plan for Language Access in the California Courts, Judicial Council of California, 2015, at 16.

Implementation Task Force, established in 2015, was charged with implementing many of these changes and sunset in March 2019, with the Language Access Subcommittee of the Advisory Committee on Providing Access and Fairness taking over “to ensure the continuation of efforts to achieve and maintain access to justice for California’s LEP, deaf, and hard of hearing court users, including efforts to support the goals and remaining ongoing recommendations of the LAP for the branch.” The California Court of Appeals has recognized the importance of the LAP, citing to the plan and the efforts of the Judicial Council in a published decision, which found that judicial operations should function “keeping with the spirit” of the recommendations.¹⁴ Despite this recognition, serious challenges remain. Eleven years later, with all three phases of the LAP completed, broad oversight efforts in place, increased resource allocations, and innovations in interpreter deployment, courts across the state still claim that they lack the resources necessary to provide meaningful and comprehensive language access for all court users, while simultaneously maintaining that they have no obligation to do so.

III. Machine Translation & AI-Generated Language Services Are Not in Compliance with Legal Obligations and Must Be Subject to Appropriate Safeguards

With regard to technological advancements, it is important to note that government agencies have rejected the use of machine translation tools as a method of complying with federal civil rights mandates.¹⁵ Industry best practices, extensive research, and federal guidance have established that the use of machine translation must be reviewed by a qualified human translator to ensure accuracy.¹⁶ For example, the Department of Justice Office of Justice Programs (DOJ OJP) Language Access Plan states that, “OJP will ensure that all translations are completed by qualified translators. OJP will avoid using translation applications or web resources alone without a review by a human translator and the use of other quality control measures.”¹⁷ Federal regulations¹⁸ and DOJ compliance agreements¹⁹ also do not condone the use of machine translation without qualified human review. Last year, the National Center for State Courts also published guidance, Machine Translation: Considerations and Cautions for Courts, similarly calling for appropriate safeguards and considerations.²⁰ A recent federal guide from December 2025 states that machine translation should not be used without qualified human review.²¹ In May 2026, the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights issued a bipartisan report, Language Access for Individuals with Limited English Proficiency, which states that human reviewers are needed whenever machine translation and AI is utilized, and that translations should undergo a two-step process of being reviewed by stakeholders or a qualified proofreader "to ensure accuracy and appropriateness (i.e., neither too colloquial, not overly formal)."²² Across agencies and institutions, the guidance is clear: unreviewed machine translation should not be used as a substitute for qualified human translation.

The same risks that prompted California to adopt safeguards for generative artificial intelligence in court operations warrant comparable protections governing the use of machine translation and AI-based language translation tools. California promulgated court rules applying AI safeguards to court staff and judicial officers. Rule 10.430 and Standard 10.80 prohibit the entry of confidential information into a public GenAI system, preclude the use of GenAI that would discriminate on the basis of protected classifications, direct court staff and judicial officers to verify accuracy and correct errors/hallucinations, and require the removal of any bias and offensive or harmful content. The risks and dangers inherent in AI must be applied with equal force to machine translation and AI-based language translation tools that increasingly dominate the market.

Machine translation and generative AI tools are prone to errors that not only undermine accuracy but often go undetected, with serious consequences in a judicial setting. Tools such as Google Translate, DeepL, and Microsoft Translator have relied on neural machine translation algorithms that may produce text that sounds fluent but frequently contains errors in meaning, grammar, register, and cultural context. Generative AI tools such as ChatGPT, Claude, and Gemini compound these risks further—they can produce polished, well-rendered content that sounds authoritative but is factually or linguistically fabricated. All these tools are advertised as capable of delivering translations with "native fluency" at a fraction of the time and cost of working with qualified human translators. The lines between these tools are progressively blurring; for example, Google Translate recently announced a series of updates around the integration of Gemini's translation capabilities into its platform.²³ Erroneous automated translations often go entirely undetected, i.e., neither party realizes a miscommunication has occurred, and both walk away believing accurate information has been exchanged. In a judicial context, this not only misleads and harms court users—costing them vital services, benefits, and legal remedies—but also raises severe ethical and potential malpractice concerns.

IV. Several Broad Areas of Concern Must Be Addressed to Achieve Equitable and Fair Access to the California Courts

The issues outlined herein demonstrate that the promise of meaningful and equitable language access for all has not been realized. These failures continue despite the obligations to follow the LAP,²⁴ local court plans,²⁵ and numerous other civil rights mandates.²⁶ California courts' failure to provide meaningful language services to court users with LEP constitutes discrimination on the basis of national origin and ethnic group identification. Linguistically marginalized court users have not been provided with timely or equal access to information regarding critical services and benefits and are not afforded the same opportunity to prepare for or participate in their hearings, in contrast to English-speaking court users. The lack of meaningful access for the nearly six and a half million residents of California who do not use English as their primary language²⁷ has impacted our communities in significant ways, including the inability or delay in seeking critical legal relief and putting forth their claims. Now, with over a decade since the LAP and accompanying legislation, rules, and policies have been adopted, we call upon the Judicial Council to conduct a thorough examination, investigation, and evaluation of the effectiveness of implementation and enforcement efforts.

Access to the courts is a fundamental, sacred right in our justice system. It is also too often denied to those most in need of the guarantee. In this section, we identify four key areas of concern that must be addressed to ensure equitable and fair access to California's state courts:

- Language Access in Judicial Proceedings
- Language Access Outside Judicial Proceedings
- Use of Machine Translation
- Other Uses of Technology & Remote Court Access

We explore each of the priorities listed above in more detail below.

A. Language Access in Judicial Proceedings

The promise of meaningful language access in all judicial proceedings under Goal 2 of the LAP (Recommendations 8–24) remains unrealized, with the reality being one of delays, pressure, and improvised workarounds that put fundamental legal rights at risk. Californians with LEP continue to experience extended delays and continuances in cases involving interpreters, and face persistent pressure from judges and court staff to proceed without interpreters or to secure their own. In a recent unlawful detainer (UD) case in Los Angeles, a Spanish-speaking tenant appeared for an Order to Show Cause hearing, which had significant consequences, including a possible lockout order. The judicial officer refused to wait for the interpreter, deeming it a waste of resources, and proceeded with his ruling. It was only when the interpreter arrived after the hearing had concluded that the court user was able to understand what transpired. In another recent UD matter, a Cantonese-speaking tenant was pressured by two different judicial officers to proceed without an interpreter; in one instance, the tenant's own attorney was asked to interpret for her client. The attorney was compelled to inform the court that, despite both being ethnically Chinese, she and her client did not share a common language. One judicial officer went further, advising the attorney that insisting on an interpreter would adversely affect the tenant's position in settlement negotiations because the landlord would be accruing additional attorney's fees while waiting. The fact that this tenant had an attorney to intervene on her behalf was the only safeguard against a fundamentally unfair proceeding. Those appearing without counsel are far more likely to succumb to this type of pressure, placing critical legal rights and relief at risk.

These barriers extend to “lower priority” matters ordered in Evidence Code § 756, such as small claims proceedings, where court users are routinely told to bring their own interpreters on the basis that interpreter resources are unavailable — notwithstanding that the LAP's phased implementation of interpreter services across all court-ordered and court-operated programs was intended to be fully completed by 2020.²⁸ Specifically, LAP Recommendation 10 states “Beginning immediately, as resources are available, but in any event no later than 2020, courts will provide qualified court interpreters in all court-ordered, court-operated programs, services and events, to all LEP litigants, witnesses, and persons with a significant interest in the case (Phases 1, 2, and 3)” (emphasis added). In complete misalignment with this recommendation, Orange County Superior Court's small claims preparation page currently states explicitly: “It is your responsibility to get your own interpreter. You can ask a friend, relative, or someone else to interpret for you when you go to court,” adding that “in civil cases, with the exception of domestic violence proceedings in Family Law cases, the person needing the interpreter must get and pay for his or her own interpreter or get a friend to help interpret.”²⁹ As a result of these practices, court users with LEP are often left to navigate these proceedings with the assistance of bilingual family members who may have limited knowledge of legal terminology, court procedures, and the ethical and professional standards governing interpreting. Moreover, we have observed that judicial officers frequently fail to qualify these bilingual support people as provisional interpreters as mandated by California Rule of Court 2.893, further eroding the procedural safeguards that are supposed to protect court users with LEP.

²⁸ The LAP explains: “The branch is constantly aware of the need to build in efficiencies and cost savings. The plan therefore recommends a strategy for phasing in the expansion of spoken language interpreter services in all court matters consistent with new Evidence Code § 756, where existing resources prohibit immediate expansion to all cases; and it recommends the creation of scheduling protocols to ensure the most efficient use of interpreters. The plan also proposes the thoughtful and responsible deployment of technological solutions, such as appropriate use of video remote technology and multilingual audiovisual tools, which provide language access while ensuring due process and high quality language services. The recommendations in the plan also set the framework for identifying the additional funding that will be needed to enable the courts to meet the increased demand on court resources that will arise from the branch's commitment to language access without sacrificing any other court services.”

B. Language Access Outside Judicial Proceedings

LAP Goal 3, which calls for providing language access services at all points of contact outside of judicial proceedings (Recommendations 25–35), also remains largely unimplemented in practice. Court users with LEP face profound and systemic barriers when attempting to access court self-help services, family law facilitator offices, child support services, and other critical court programs. Rather than proactively providing language access, many courts shift the burden entirely onto the court user, for example, the Los Angeles Superior Court's Family Law Facilitator page advises “non-English speakers” to “bring someone who can assist with interpreting.”³⁰ This burden-shifting forces vulnerable court users to rely on untrained friends or family members for high-stakes legal matters, raising serious concerns about accuracy, confidentiality, and coercion.

Despite their critical role in helping unrepresented court users address legal problems, Self-Help Centers frequently fail to provide language access, often due to staff confusion about applicable requirements. In Ventura County, for example, court staff have claimed they are not required to provide interpreters because self-help services are not specifically enumerated in Evidence Code § 756 — a misreading of the law that leaves non-dominant language users without assistance to which they are entitled under the LAP and broader constitutional and statutory frameworks. In Yuba County, a self-help and family law facilitator office that routinely assists court users in completing Domestic Violence Restraining Order (DVRO) filings handed a Dari-speaking domestic violence survivor the DVRO packet in English and directed her to use Google Translate to complete it — an approach wholly inadequate for documents with serious legal consequences. At the Pasadena Courthouse, self-help staff routinely turn individuals with LEP away entirely when bilingual staff are unavailable, rather than offering telephonic or remote interpreter services as an alternative. Further illustrating how pervasive the issue is, Merced County self-help services staff say they cannot guarantee the availability of Spanish-speaking staff for appointments and for individuals to make their own arrangements to have a friend or relative to assist with the appointment; the San Benito County website states, “Interpreter services are not available at the Self-Help Center, if needed, please bring your own interpreter to help you,”³¹ and Santa Barbara County staff at the self-help center inform Mixteco-speaking individuals that they should bring their own interpreters when seeking services at the center.

Mandatory court programs are equally inaccessible. For example, Our Children First,³² a Los Angeles Superior Court program required for all custody matters, is offered only in English and Spanish, with no guidance or accommodations for speakers of other languages. Lastly, even basic informational access by phone is compromised, as court staff across the state routinely fail to utilize available telephonic interpreter services when fielding calls from callers with LEP, effectively cutting off a critical channel through which self-represented court users might otherwise obtain guidance.

C. Use of Machine Translation

In or about 2020, the Judicial Council launched the CA Court Translator, a Voice-to-Text translation application (VTT)³³ that “provides real-time transcription and translation” for court users with LEP.³⁴ The VTT app was used outside the courtroom at counters, clerk’s windows, and self-help centers.³⁵ Although the machine-based translation program was purportedly a pilot program, it was used in at least 32 courts across the state.³⁶

Court staff reported concerning feedback about the VTT. Staff concerns included that the VTT did not hear users correctly; did not translate complex legal terms correctly; did not translate correctly when the court user used improper Spanish; and it picked up surrounding voices, presumably impacting its ability to properly transcribe/translate.³⁷ Furthermore, staff reported the VTT translation often lacked context; technical terms were not translated correctly; and that some languages have better translation than others.³⁸

A review of the VTT’s transcriptions and translations support these concerns.³⁹ In the examples below, we compare the VTT translation with translations by qualified human translators. First, we share an example where a court user appears to use the VTT microphone feature to ask for the final paperwork regarding their DUI due to their immigration proceedings, using the common Spanish phrase “trámite de papeles” to refer to immigration-related paperwork.

³⁹ In December 2023, based on concerns related to language access issues generally, including VTT and its deployment, legal aid advocates initiated the submission of a series of public access requests for judicial administrative records to the Judicial Council and 13 county courts, pursuant to Rule 10.500. The examples referenced herein are taken from responses to the records produced.

VTT Transcription of Court User Statement:	“Sí este yo tengo un DIU hay y mi abogado por trámite de papeles está pidiendo el final”. ⁴⁰
VTT Automated Translation:	“Yes, I have an IUD, and my lawyer is asking for an end to the paperwork due to paperwork.” ⁴¹
Qualified Human Translator Translation:	“Yes, um, I have a DUI, and my attorney is requesting the final document for paperwork purposes.”

The VTT translation resulted in the court staffer’s apparent confusion, possibly due to both the nonsensical reference to an IUD and the vague translation about paperwork. The staffer responds *“What paperwork are you asking for? Is this for a new case or old?”*⁴² The court user then tries to explain the situation again using the VTT’s microphone feature:

VTT Transcription of Court User Statement:	“Es para un caso nuevo de que mi abogado quiere al final de El DIU [sic] hay para que conste Conste [sic] que he pagado y para trabajar porque estoy en trámite de papeles y con eso Costa [sic] que estoy legal.” ⁴³
VTT Automated Translation:	“It is for a new case that my lawyer wants at the end of The IUD [sic] there is for the record that I have paid and to work because I am in the process of paperwork and with that it means that I am legal.” ⁴⁴
Qualified Human Translator Translation:	“It’s for a new case for which my attorney wants the final DUI document so that there’s proof, proof that I have paid and to be able to work because I am in the process of getting my papers and that will show I’m here legally.”

In this example, the VTT translates the phrase “estoy en trámite de papeles” as *“I am in the process of paperwork.”*⁴⁵ While “papeles” literally translates to “papers,” in this context the term more than likely means “immigration proceedings.” However, the automated translation of “the process of paperwork” does not suggest that the court user is referring to an immigration context. While a qualified human interpreter could have intervened to clarify the ambiguity, reliance solely on machine translation appears to have resulted in a misunderstanding.

The VTT errors likely resulted in the court user obtaining incorrect information from court staff. In the above example, the court staffer responded asking if the court user wanted copies of their records and told them that the court did not have any cases for them.⁴⁶ Evidently, the court staffer misunderstood the court user was referring to an immigration matter when referring to a “new case” and, as a result, the staff member tells the court user that the court does not have a new case for them. Moreover, it is unclear if the staffer was able to surmise that the user’s inquiry concerned a DUI and, one wonders, whether that may have required different guidance to obtain the relevant records.

In a similar exchange on or about December 2021, a court user, using the keyboard feature of the VTT, tried to explain to the court staffer that they do not have their license because of a DUI:

VTT Transcription of Court User Statement:	“Es q [sic] no puedo tramitarla x [sic]. Q [sic] tengo un diguay [sic]. Asta [sic] después de 3 meses.”⁴⁷
VTT Automated Translation:	“It is that I cannot process it x [sic]. I have a diguay. Up after 3 months.”⁴⁸
Qualified Human Translator Translation:	“The thing is, I cannot process it because I have a DUI. Not until after 3 months.”⁴⁹

Although in writing “diguay” does not resemble “DUI”, the spoken pronunciation of “diguay” does, which a qualified human interpreter or translator would have recognized immediately. As a result of the VTT errors, the court staffer does not realize the question is related to a DUI and states “You need to get me your driver’s license by 1:17 this date,” and “Can you get me your license by [redacted].”⁵⁰ The VTT translates “by 1:17 this date” as “antes de la 1:17 de esta fecha.”⁵¹ The date is translated as if it was a time and may have resulted in the court user’s misunderstanding the exact date they needed to provide their license.

To contextualize the significance of the above exchange, the court user appeared to be seeking assistance because they had been cited for driving without a license. The user appeared to try to explain that they could not provide a license because of a prior DUI and that they would not be able to do so for at least three more months. However, as shown above, the court staffer completely missed that this court user had a DUI. As such, they incorrectly told the court user that the court would give them an extension to procure their driver’s license and likely erred in further suggesting that the citation could be resolved once the court user provided their license.⁵²

Rather than facilitating communication, VTT errors routinely left court users more confused about legal processes after interacting with court staff. For example, in an exchange related to Form TR-320, a court staffer appears to explain to the court user that the form is an opportunity for the individual to explain their financial situation to the judge in order to reduce or cancel the citation amount. The VTT transcribes the court staffer’s message as “Complete this form, the paper. And the Saddles check, if your address is, correct. Okay. Sting the judge to reduce a fever.”⁵³ Although the message is clearly full of transcription errors, the VTT renders a literal translation of the nonsensical message into Spanish.⁵⁴ Had a qualified human interpreter been present, the court staff’s original message would likely have been understood and, if not, the interpreter would have requested clarification before providing an interpretation. The court user in this exchange faced a $700 fine because they were late to pay.⁵⁵ The court user stated they could not afford a $700 citation fee.⁵⁶ The TR-320 form is oftentimes the only opportunity an individual who is experiencing financial hardship has to request a fee reduction, cancellation, or some other relief to a judge. Despite its importance, the instructions provided to this court user were incomprehensible as result of unreviewed machine transcription and translation errors.

Machine translation is often unable to recognize the context and setting of the communication taking place and thereby routinely renders translations that are incorrect in the particular setting or context. The VTT was no exception. In a November 2023 communication between a court user and court staffer, the VTT failed to properly translate legal terminology where a court staffer explained that the cost of the traffic ticket would be reduced if the court user filed a plea of no contest. The VTT improperly translated “no contest” as “no competition.”

VTT Transcription of Court Staffer Statement:	“It’s a plea offer means no contest.” ⁵⁷
VTT Automated Translation:	“Significa que no hay competencia.” ⁵⁸
Qualified Human Translator Translation:	“Es una oferta para declararse sin impugnar los cargos.”

The VTT failed to properly translate “no contest” as a legal term and instead translated it as “no competition.” Whereas this translation may be correct in a different context (e.g., there will be no contest between the two teams), in this setting the translation is completely wrong. In a setting where terms, and particularly legal terms, have serious consequences for court users, the VTT’s context-specific errors are extremely troublesome.

The VTT also fails to properly account for unique language-specific speech patterns. In a September 2021 exchange, a court user sought guidance to obtain a restraining order against someone they feared. The VTT was unable to decipher the object of the court user’s statement when the court user expressed fear they could be harmed while they waited for a restraining order to be filed and processed.

VTT Automated Translation:	"But I'll be scared If you do something to me." ⁶⁰
Qualified Human Translator Translation:	"But I'm afraid she/he/they might do something to me."

In Spanish, "si me hace algo" could be translated as "if you do something to me," "if he does something to me," "if she does something to me," or "if they do something to me." The correct translation will depend on the context of the conversation. Here, the VTT is unable to understand what the court user actually meant. In contrast, a qualified human interpreter would have been able to determine the right interpretation given the court user's previous statements or, in the alternative, would have asked for clarification.

The VTT records are rife with similar examples. In an exchange involving a Punjabi-speaking court user, the VTT app translated the court user's message of "I do not have so much money" to "I have so much money."⁶¹ In another exchange involving an Arabic-speaking court user seeking assistance with a restraining order, the court staff's message to the user was, "I need you to fill out this sheet with the name of the person who's getting the restraining order phone number and address," but the VTT translated it as "I want you to fill out this sheet with the name of the person who receives the phone number, and address of the restraining order."⁶² These errors may have directly undermined court users' ability to exercise their legal rights and obtain critical remedies, including protection from unsafe situations.

In one egregious instance resulting from vast VTT errors, a court staffer appeared to become so frustrated with the VTT's nonsensical translations that they refused to further assist the court user. The VTT transcribed the court user's message as "Honda navi" which is nonsensical.⁶³ The VTT merely renders the exact same message as the English translation "Honda navi".⁶⁴ The VTT then transcribes the court user's next message as "No vivos handanovic" and translates it as "Not alive handanovic."⁶⁵ As the VTT struggles to transcribe the court user's messages, the staffer appears to grow frustrated and states, "I don't understand".⁶⁶ And when the court user asks why, the staffer states, "Because you don't make sense" and then simply states "We're done."⁶⁷ It is unclear what help the court user needed and whether it was urgent or critical. What is clear is that they did not receive further assistance from this staffer as result of the staffer's complete reliance on the VTT.

The Judicial Council's own commissioned report exposes a profound disconnect between how the VTT was designed to be used and how it was actually deployed. In June 2025, the National Center on State Courts presented survey findings and recommendations on the VTT to the PAF Language Access Subcommittee.⁶⁸ The presentation explained that the VTT was intended as a last resort when no other language access was reasonably available, to be utilized for short, non-complex interactions. While some Spanish communications were reviewed, no such oversight occurred or was in place for other languages. Survey results found that the VTT “should not be used in complex interactions or where a public user is looking for more complicated information,” that there was “public user resistance and/or confusion with using the Translator App,” and that technological challenges resulted in “awkward set-up options” and “pairing issues between devices and application timing out.” The presentation included broad findings acknowledging limited national guidance on VTT-type tools and noted longstanding federal guidance and recommendations from other industries cautioning against reliance solely on machine translation without professional human review. As illustrated in the examples above, these findings and recommendations are in stark contrast to how VTT has been utilized, demonstrating the need for enforceable safeguards that ensure that no machine translation content reaches a court user without qualified human review and appropriate revision.

We understand that the use of the VTT was discontinued as of April 2026 of this year, nearly six years after its initiation. We are gravely concerned about all the communication errors that likely occurred and likely remained uncorrected during its use. As explained in greater detail above, industry best practices, extensive research, and federal guidance have established that the use of machine translation must be reviewed by a qualified human translator to ensure accuracy. Should the courts decide to revert back to the use of machine translation, whether the VTT or some other machine or AI-based translation program, for any of their public services, we urge them to closely examine whether adequate quality controls exist to ensure that court users with LEP are not receiving unequal services from the courts.

D. Other Uses of Technology & Remote Court Access

LAP Goal 2, subsection titled "Use of Technology for Providing Access in Courtroom Proceedings" (Recommendations 12–18), takes a cautious, quality-first approach, emphasizing that technology is a supplement to — not a replacement for — qualified in-person interpreters. Similar to subsequently codified statutes,⁶⁹ LAP Recommendations 12–18 reflect the core principle that in-person certified and registered court interpreters are the preferred method of providing court interpreting services. Technology-based options, particularly remote interpreting, may only be used where they allow court users with LEP to "fully and meaningfully participate" in the proceedings and must never compromise the quality or accuracy of interpretation. Throughout, the LAP emphasizes that any use of technology must be accompanied by comprehensive training for judicial officers, interpreter coordinators, and court staff on both the capabilities and the limitations of remote tools — including the earlier onset of interpreter fatigue,⁷⁰ potential loss of visual and nonverbal cues, and the risk of disconnection — so that problems can be anticipated and resolved quickly or remote interpretation terminated when necessary.

⁷⁰ Braun, S. (2013). Keep your distance? Remote interpreting in legal proceedings: A critical assessment of a growing practice. Interpreting 15 (2), 200-228.

Despite LAP guidelines, many state courts have turned to remote interpreters in an effort to address interpreter shortages, a practice accompanied by new challenges. For interpreters, remote interpreting is associated with increased cognitive load, faster onset of fatigue⁷¹, and an elevated risk of hearing-related injuries.⁷² For court users appearing in person, we have observed that court users are often forced to access remote interpreter services through their own personal cell phones — an approach that is problematic on multiple fronts. Court users should not be required to furnish their own equipment to receive language services to which they are legally entitled; the quality and accessibility of interpreting should not depend on an individual's phone model, battery life, access to headphones, or available cellular data. It also prevents court users from using their phones for other legitimate purposes during proceedings, such as retrieving documents, conducting research, accessing notes, or receiving communications. Moreover, requiring a court user to use and potentially expose their personal phone number in open court implicates serious privacy concerns, which are especially acute in matters involving domestic violence, sexual assault, and stalking, where disclosure of personal contact information can pose safety risks. Beyond privacy, the audio limitations of standard cell phones present a serious barrier to comprehension for both court users and interpreters due to the way that cell phone audio compresses and narrows sound frequency range, causing profound listening fatigue and often requiring users to dangerously increase volume to understand speech. In the precision-demanding environment of a courtroom, these technical limitations pose a direct risk to both comprehension and auditory health. Court users further report that these phone-based interpreter connections are frequently dropped, and they are unable to interrupt proceedings to notify the court that interpretation has ceased. These failures are not merely procedural — they have real and concrete consequences for court users.

Since 2020, state courts have significantly expanded the use of remote and hybrid hearings, in which court users participate remotely, initially in response to the COVID-19 pandemic. Court users who use non-dominant spoken and sign languages face pervasive barriers to accessing court hearings remotely due to language and tech barriers. We consistently hear feedback from court users and interpreters that remote/hybrid hearings have poor quality audio that leads to missed information, confusion, and delays. We have also heard reports that poor video quality from onsite cameras are a problem for both interpreters and court users, as well as the failure to consistently follow essential protocols for hybrid meetings with interpreting, such as onsite participants always speaking into a dedicated handheld or delegate microphone. Furthermore, the courts' frequent use of a complicated dual device set-up for remote proceedings is a barrier to access. Court users are often unable to navigate audio and video formats simultaneously in order to meaningfully participate in proceedings. The use of dual devices makes consecutive interpreting the most appropriate mode to ensure meaningful access; however, judicial officers often express frustration with the additional time required for consecutive interpreting and instead direct interpreters to interpret simultaneously, even when the technology is not well suited to that mode. Despite being disfavored by interpreters and court users alike, the Judicial Council encourages the use of dual devices, funding cell phones for interpreters for this purpose and creating confusing instructional materials on the practice.⁷³

Challenges related to technology and remote court hearings disproportionately impact court users who use non-dominant languages. Californians with LEP frequently have limited tech access and fluency, with census data showing they lack access to computers at rates nearly 2.5 times of those proficient in English and lack complete access to the internet at rates more than twice of those proficient in English. As a result, court users with LEP often have no access to the limited multilingual information available on the Judicial Council website and cannot navigate the court's tech requirements for accessing remote court proceedings. This disproportionate impact must be taken into account in any use of technology by courts that affects public participation.

V. Recommendations

The gaps documented above are not isolated failures; they are systemic and require immediate and sustained action. California's courts are falling short of their legal and ethical obligations to linguistically marginalized communities. We urge PAF to conduct a comprehensive evaluation of language access across California's courts and to use the following recommendations as a guide for ensuring that no Californian is denied access to justice because of the language they use.

1. Ensure Meaningful Language Access for All Court Users in All Judicial Proceedings: In accordance with LAP Goal 2: Provide Qualified Language Access Services in All Judicial Proceedings, Recommendations 8 - 24, strengthen resources and training to judicial officers and court staff to ensure meaningful language access is provided to all court users in all proceedings. Evaluate legislation passed in conjunction with the LAP intended to account for phased implementation, including Evidence Code § 756, to ensure policies are adequate to achieve the goals determined by the LAP.
2. Ensure Meaningful Language Access at Points of Contact Outside the Courtroom: In accordance with LAP Goal 3: Provide Language Access Services at All Points of Contact Outside Judicial Proceedings, Recommendations 25-35, strengthen resources and training to court staff working with court users outside of the courtroom, such as at self-help centers, family law facilitators, phone services and information, traffic and other windows, clerks' offices, information desks, and other public contact areas.
3. Develop Safeguards for a Just and Equitable Machine Translation Framework: Taking into account LAP Goal 2, subsection titled "Use of Technology for Providing Access in Courtroom Proceedings" (Recommendations 12–18), Rule 10.430 and Standard 10.80, any use of machine translation must incorporate detailed safeguards and qualified human review as integral parts of the process, culminating in final approval prior to reaching the end user.
4. Improve Minimum Tech Standards and Reporting on Remote Proceedings and Make the Standards Enforceable: Minimum Technology Standards for Remote ⁷³Judicial Council of California, How to Connect to a Remote Court Proceeding With Interpretation—Two Devices, https://selfhelp.courts.ca.gov/sites/default/files/2022-10/VRI_G_Interpretation_Two%20Devices-2022-EN.pdf (accessed August 18, 2026).

Proceedings⁷⁴ referenced in statutes⁷⁵ must be improved and made enforceable. These statutes, along with LAP Goal 2, in the section titled "Use of Technology for Providing Access in Courtroom Proceedings" (Recommendations 12–18), already require appropriate tech to ensure that interpreters and court users can see and hear everyone and fully and meaningfully participate in the proceedings. The current standards, however, lack specificity and do not reflect best practices to ensure effective compliance. Our recommendations to improve the standards are below.

a. Strengthen the protections in the Minimum Technology Standards for Remote Proceedings:

- i. Absent extraordinary circumstances, best practices dictate that all parties and interpreters be present in-person. Current applicable statutes already require that interpreters shall be physically present in the courtroom upon request.
- ii. During remote and hybrid proceedings, in order for all parties to effectively hear each other and to protect interpreter auditory safety, all onsite participants must always speak into a microphone, such as a handheld or delegate mic, and no ambient microphone systems should be used.
- iii. No interpreters or court users should be required to use dual devices. If dual devices have to be used or if other safety and tech requirements are not met, interpreting for the entire proceeding must be in the consecutive mode. There are effective options for integrated simultaneous interpreting for hybrid environments that are much more effective than the dual device approach, but they require trained and dedicated staff managing the audiovisual equipment and other technology components onsite and the provision of tech support to all parties.
- iv. Allocated funding for technology improvements and court staff training must prioritize interpreting equipment, interpreter health and safety, and effective remote participation by court users with LEP or who are Deaf or Hard of Hearing. To ensure funds are used effectively, court interpreters should be meaningfully consulted in decisions regarding technology upgrades and the development of training for court staff on managing remote proceedings.

b. Expand & Enforce Reporting on Remote Court Proceedings with Interpreters: There must be proper implementation of the existing reporting requirements and provisions. So far, the Judicial Council annual reports have not addressed any aspects of remote proceedings conducted with interpreters.⁷⁶

⁷⁵ See Welfare & Institutions Code section 679.5(n), Code of Civil Procedure section 367.76(o), and Penal Code section 977(j).

Reporting about remote court hearings should include the number of appearances with interpreting, languages provided, whether the interpreters were remote or in-person, effectiveness of interpreter equipment, and other aspects of whether court interpreters “can appropriately see and hear remote participants, as well as to ensure that remote participants can appropriately see and hear the judicial officer and other courtroom participants” (as required by applicable statutes).

5. Designate Judicial Council Statewide Technical Assistance Coordinator & Staff to ensure equitable court access for individuals with LEP and those who are Deaf or Hard of Hearing: The coordinator would work with courts to identify needs, coordinate resources, and streamline the implementation of language access best practices. The coordinator would also provide training and technical assistance for interpreters and court staff and would provide oversight to ensure accountability with the standards and protocols required for equitable court access. Research shows that it is a best practice for state agencies to centralize language access services.⁷⁷

VI. Conclusion

We urge the Judicial Council to conduct a thorough evaluation of the implementation and impact of the Strategic Plan for Language Access in the California Courts and to subsequently adopt the measures necessary to ensure true and meaningful access for all. Appropriate and consistently followed policies, protocols, and safeguards must be put in place to ensure equal access at all points of contact and for all court users. To act otherwise would deepen the devastating and disparate impact on linguistically marginalized communities, including immigrant, Indigenous, and Deaf and Hard of Hearing communities, and undermine ongoing efforts to advance equity and inclusion. The Judicial Council must do and demand more to ensure that all our diverse communities seeking to utilize the courts have access to justice.
